Mystery disappearance of an English Teacher: Students suspected

The police is searching for the English teacher but anyone know where he is.

An English teacher at a London school was last seen 24 hours ago in a restaurant in St Anne's Street. Her boyfriend went to the toilet and when he arrived at the table where he was dining with her, she was gone.

Police are searching for any trace of the teacher's whereabouts and so far a scarf of hers has been found near a bus stop two kilometres from the scene. Her boyfriend said: "I don't understand what could have happened to my girlfriend. I am very worried about her and whether she is still alive.

Population growth is killing the planet.

Overpopulation is causing serious environmental problems that are wiping out many species of animals. According to studies, if we carry on like this, by 2100 we will have completely melted the North and South Poles, and polar bears will have become extinct.

"Here is a picture of the English teacher explaining the lessons. It is believed that she may have disappeared because she was afraid of a disruptive pupil who was constantly threatening her. The police have already questioned the pupil and he has said. I have done nothing wrong to my teacher. I admit that I threatened her all the time because I didn't like her. But I did it, that's all. I don't hold myself responsible for anything bad that happened to my teacher.

Coronavirus cases fall across Europe.

Thanks to mass vaccination across Europe, the rate of new covid infections has dropped considerably, combined with restrictions and social awareness.
